

The Snow Fairy

First Read This

This is part of a story about a snowstorm in a magical land.

Jay curled up in a wooden rocking chair next to the crackling fire in the Snow Fairy's cottage. His lips were blue and he had frost in his hair when he first arrived, but now he was warm and toasty.

Jay had never seen a house like this before. It was inside an old tree stump, behind a purple front door. There were leaves all over the floor and the walls were covered in spotty wallpaper. A fluffy white cat slept peacefully by the fire.

The Snow Fairy floated out of the kitchen and passed Jay a cup of tea. "Do you need anything else?" she asked. "Maybe one of my many books to pass the time until this snowstorm ends?"

Just then, Jay saw something outside — a green goblin shivering in the snow. He was about to tell the Snow Fairy when she shut the curtains. "Ignore that thing," she said, but Jay was worried about the little creature. He got up from his chair and put his soggy shoes back on.
